M. DE LESSEPS caunot agree with the English Government upon the dues to be charged for admission through the Suez Canal. The rate is already very high, and the Canal Company wished to increase it by an addition of one franc per ton for two or three years. In return, M. DE LESSERS pledged himself to axecute improvements to the extent of gramme:-30,000,000f. in fifteen or twenty years, and to Quick March... "Troopers"...... Unrath. accept what had been done with regard to Grand March . "Aux Flambeaux" ... the violated contract. That is to say, M, DE Grand Selection "Reminiscences of Bellini", Godfrey. LESSEPS offered to undertake some improvements in the Canal, probably of a triffing nature, for which the steamers were to pay beforehand. Now it is well known that the has resolved and is going soon to establish Canal needs widening and deepening in many new line to China and the East via the some places. There are many awkward bends navigation, and vessels frequently stick in tistions for carrying out this purpose are in suggest an addition to the already heavy forty years' working, they have suffered only persons intended to be benefited and as to the of the woods, or that they would be a distinctive dues. It is stated that some shipowners are contemplating this, as it would afford a wider range of the market to speculate upon. The negotiations on these proposals of the great engineer were, however, broken off by the British Government, doubtless for some excellent reason, and the suggested improve- somer was caught near Ladder street, and was ven and grandchildren, and at the back the drawn all the balance due to them? - If there ments will not, consequently, be attempted. As sentenced to three months' hard labour, the expenditure during 1874 was 17,500,000t and the receipts 26,300,000f., it is obvious orderly, and destroying property in a married that the Company could spare a trifle for the M. DE LESSEPS is evidently not inclined to destroyed property to the value of $3.

M. DE LESSEPS complains bitterly of the fact that the official tonnage at present in use is incorrect, the consequence being, he says, "that no control is possible, and most ships are freighted to "double their registered toninge." He goes on to say that this to one months' hard labour. system of false tonnage was imposed upon the Company by force, and inveighs against one of his boarders named H. Davis, with being the overloading of ships with a vigour rival. disorderly and firing a gun in his bouse. The ling Mr. PLIMSOLL'S. "The overloading of ships has," he says, "become scandalous, that the gun was out of order and it went off and is not only a great source of loss to the shareholders of the Suez Canal Company, but, what is worse, is the inevitable cause of numerous shipwiecks. Official tonnage must one day necessarily express the real capacity labour. of the ship. On that day shipowners may easily be prevented from freighting their capacity, they will eventually incur loss both remanded the case till the man was discharged both to the joke and to its subject, Legislation will, how. from Hospital; and said in all these cases be ever, be turned in this direction before long. and not only will unseaworthy ships be prevented from leaving British ports but overloaded vessels also. But the Company do not lose much by this alleged overloading. They make surcharges which the musters of vessels are powerless to resist, though they strongly allege that they are unjust and excessive.

In fact M. DE LESSEPS has never got on well with the British Government. He alleges that the English are anxious to dictate their own terms, and practically control the Canal. He is jealous, too, their influence with the Porte, and denounces the latter as being responsible for the losses of the shareholders. He never, apparently, it is mainly on English ships that the Canal has to depend for its revenue. draw on him (witness) the sum of $26. Such bills have no right to bear East has gone on steadily increasing, year after year; at such a rate, in fact, as to induce the belief among some that the number was in excess of the demand. This has, tent to be true Owing to the largely fell while a serious rise occurred in the rates of insurance for Canal steamers. circumstance which has tended meterially to diminish the profits of shipowners. The Bombay and Calcutta lines are both said to be overcrowded, and it is confidently anticipated that some of the steamers running on those routes will ere long be compelled to seek more remunerative lines. If this should prove true there is not much hope of the Canal traffic increasing very largely in the future. That it has reached its present proportions is due to English enterprise, and M. DE LESSEPS should not forget the fact. It ought to have made him a little more conciliatory and accommodating, but he wanted supreme control of his work, and has not forgiven the interference with his wishes by the Ottomar Government, at the request of the British Cabinet. It is much to be regretted that the Capal was not made with English money, as it is principally used by English ships. We have, however, to thank our own indifference, supineness, and unbelief for that, and to a Frenchman is due the merit having, in the face of great and manifold obstacles, achieved the greatest engineering

He sang, it appears, at the Berlin Opera House during the reign of the late King of Prussia, and received a great deal of attention from the Royal family. He mentions that his singing induced the Queen for the first time to witness a performance of "La Dame Blanche." Her Majesty bad hitherto extertained a dislike to this opera, as the frequent apparitions of its "woman ir white" painfully reminded her of the traditional spectre of, her husband's family. This spectre was that of an old woman with a bropm. Whenever any catastrophe was about to bappen to any of Frederick the Grent's descendants the dismal sweeping of the ghostly broom made night hideous in the corridors of the Royal palace. It had been plainly heard, the Queen believed, before the death of the King's predecessor, and it was distinctly noticed before the outbreak of 1848. It is evident that the possession of this spectral sweeper gives the Hohenzollerns a decided advantage in all international questions. If the late Franco. German war had been likely to end disastrously (1) HE TOURIST'S GUIDE .to the Emperor William, it may be presumed that his family ghost would have gives him fair notice of danger.
